One useful result

Make a useful record of household belongings without cataloguing your entire life. Work through one lesson at a time, then use the three printable worksheets on a real, low-stakes situation.

Your route through this mini book

1. Start with a useful reason

2. Record identity and location

3. Link documents without scattering them

4. Maintain it when something changes

Read the lesson, compare the worked example and complete the action. Pages 7-9 are writing sheets; page 10 helps you review the result. The editable Markdown companion contains the same prompts for reuse in a notes app.

For personal learning and practice. Examples are fictional; adapt the worksheets to your situation.

Start with a useful reason

Choose why you need an inventory: finding a manual, tracking a warranty or knowing which item is stored where. Start with one category or room and a small number of items. A record that serves a real question is easier to maintain than a huge list with no purpose. Include only information you can verify. This workbook does not estimate insurance cover, legal ownership or the value of possessions.

Worked example

A household starts with six appliances because people keep searching for manuals and purchase dates. Clothing, books and decorative objects can wait. The first useful result is knowing where each appliance’s record lives.

Try it now

Choose one purpose, one category and a first batch of five items. Name the question the record should answer.
